Trump administration approves 2025 Yosemite reservation system

Yosemite National Park will implement a new reservation system in 2025 to manage crowds and protect resources, according to a version of a National Park Service press release provided to SFGATE by a source within the federal government.

It won't be the permanent reservation system that park officials signed off on in December, which President Donald Trump's administration did not approve. But after three months of pressure from lawmakers, the media and conservationists, the administration has signed off on a new pilot reservation system for the spring and summer...
